Being a teenager is difficult and confusing. This is a given. Anyone who has already done it can tell you. I find it amusing how they portray some teens in film as though life is perfect and for others it's horrible. The truth is it's difficult for all of us on some level. There's a great deal of uncertainty and lack of direction involved. So, with all the problems teenagers deal with, the last thing they need is to grapple with another one. This is why I can't fathom why God created teenage hair loss. Okay, okay, so maybe the divine powers had nothing to do with this per se. However, you have to admit it's the last thing any teenager wants to deal with. Just ask any one you know.

I can recall back in the eighth grade. There was this one fellow in my school who was losing his hair. He was only a junior in high school for God's sake. Okay, I know what you're thinking; why was I in the same school with an 11th grader. That's an easy one. I lived in a very small town. Grades 7 through 12 were all in the same school. Weird, I know! Anyway, I seriously doubt this guy had ever heard of teenage hair loss prior to losing his dew; let alone did he ever foresee such an atrocity. I know I never would. Can you imagine what teenage hair loss would even be like? Talk about being judged and whispered about behind your back. Your peers would constantly stare and snicker. This would drive me insane. The truly sad thing is that you just acquired your hair not that long ago. Talk about a short life span. I think most of us assume that our hair will last us until we're 35 or 40. Or at least we hope it will. We need these soft follicles to mingle in society. It's a mere confidence booster.

So, do you require some information on teenage hair loss? If so, it's time to exhaust your resources folks. First of all you have a PC or Mac. I'm practically certain of it. Get on Google and do a search for teenage hair loss solutions. Another route is to visit your local trichologist for answers. He/she will be able to give you the most current options for resolving teenage hair loss. Don't let that dew slip away without a fight.{mosgoogle left}
